The reason that the American people have not as yet stapped the shipment seems to be that we are getting rich out of this traffic. Mrs. Rosalie McCabe, a nurse who has beee in the Morgan family for many years, told of the scuffle in the upper hall and the shooting, as did Bernard Stewart, Mr. Morgan's valet.

Neither the justice nor Mr. Weeks was permitted to see Mr. Morgan. They apparently had as little information as to the exact condition of the banker as those held up the entrance to the Morgan estate a mile away.

This road approaching the bridge that connects the Morgan place with the main land was torn up so there is room for but a single vehicle, and there a deputy sheriff and a farm hand, working under the direction of Angus McGregor, Mr. Morgan's auperintendent, kept all who could show no god reason for entering away.

Even Herbert I. Satterlee and his wife, Mr. Morgan's sister, had difficulty in entering when they arrived in a dusty high powered car. Mrs. Satterlee and was plainly worried.

They had been preceded into the house by Dwight W. Morrow, the younger of Mr. Morgan's partners, and one of the two at present in New York; George F. Haker, ir., William Pierson Hamilton and Mrs. Hamilton, also a sister of the banker, and willard D. Straight, of the Morgan staff.

Mr. Baker was the first of these to leave. Wh the reporters stopped him at the barrier to ask what Mr. Morgan's condition was he refused to talk.

Dr. Zabriskie administered a sedative, for the banker was inclined to have a pulse, as physicians term a pulse heat above normal, and assured Mrs. Morgan that so far as he could see the wounds were not serious. Soon after Dr. Markoe came and later Dr. H. W. Lyle, and other surgeons, whose names were withheld, arrived. They went into consultation shortly after the man who deliberately could be extended.

With this announcement the house refused to believe the story.

It was placed, automatically, in the same category with the telephone inquiry of the day before to know if the Morgan firm could confirm a rumor that the Kaiser had been assassinated. Most of the 200 clerks went on with their respective duties because even Saturday morning, in war time, is a busy half day for the financial centre of the New World.

With this announcement the house resumed its normal activities, employes seemed reassured as to the chief condition, and so things continued through the morning, confidence being reinforced by several favorable bulleting. Ford reminded him that there was a speed limit on Long Island, but Helt insisted that did not matter, as he would pay any fines.

Ordinarily there is not much traffic on the road to the Morgan place at that hour of the day, and good speed was made. At the entrance to the estate, which is over a bridge, the car was recognized as that of Ford, and on the theory that his passenger was some one with legitimate business it was not stopped.

Nearing the house Holt told Ford he guessed he had better get out his card, and he opened the suitcase. Apparently it was then that he took the two weapons from the bag. He further remarked that he wished he had brought a cane with him, as it would make him appear more dignified.

It was almost 9:30 o'clock when the car reached the Morgan house. Telling the chauffeur to wait, Holt mounted the steps and rang the bell. Henry The Sunday Tribune First to Last-the Truth: News - Editorials - Advertisements
